HENRY WARD BEECHER'S FRIDAT ICLE'S" ESTIMATE OF THE VALUE OF A PURE

I have been, raising chickens this year, and have devoted a part of my pear orchard to the chicken-coops; and I have been accustomed to go out mornings and evenings to see that the boy took care of the chickens. I think I have now about ten or fifteen broods. The old hen, when watching them, would cluck; and it was to them a warning of danger, suppose. They understand it to mean that they are to come in. I could not understand that language; but these little things that had never been to school understood instantly just what she said. She gave her whole self to them; and their instinct was to run under her; and when there to lift themselves up close to her body, and get their warmth from her I have watched them, as they did this, again and again.

"How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would

What an idea of the intimate and endear-Ing relationship between the soul and the Lord Jesus Christ is conveyed in that figure! In order to get my broods, not having mother hens enough, I put out my eggs to be hatched. Two broods were brought to to me to-day. They were just hatched. One little thing was not strong enough to stand up. I left them; and when in the course of two or three hours I returned. I found that while all the rest had gone under the hen's wings this little thing was lying upon the ground, apparently dead; and I said, "What you want is warmth;" and I took it up in make a little poise and to press upwards, as if it thought I was the mother hen; and it became so far revived that it was able to cultivate toward himself-the brooding God; in the world, if he is continually in that the overshadowing God; the God of light; state of languor and inertia which always acthe same conception of care, watchfulness, poi on. tenderness, power and majesty as the words in society that connect men with their fellows. Every word that lies within the scope of lumian knowledge has been employedfor what? To press down upon the con sciousness of men the intense desire of God toward them, the exquisite sweetness of his love toward them, and everything that can make them trust him.

When we are in the troubles of life, and are bearing contradiction, it is worth our while to have such a conception of God overruling is for our own good as that we can rest in him as one that loves us, an I takes care of us, and of all that trust him and await has will and pleasure.

(Theo. L. Cuyler, D. D., in the Independent.) An hundred years ago the shining lights were not in the pulpits of our large cities, but in the pulpits of the rural parishes. Dur ing the last century, and in the early part of the present one, the ministerial thrones stood | The remaining volumes will be completed by Ocin such secluded places as Bethlehem, Northampton, Morristown, Franklin, Litchfield, and Greenfield Hill. There stood the theo logical anvils on which such men as Bellamy Edwards, Barnes, Emmons, Beecher, and Dwight hammered out their systems of doc trinal divinity, Country quiet gave time for study and hard thinking. Jonathan Edwards never could have written the immortal treatise on the Freedom of the World behind the bell pull of a noisy city street and a

In our times, the great cities are absorbing culture, brains, energy from the rural distriets into their greedy maws. City congregations scour the land to find ministers who will 'draw. "The names of conspicuous city preachers shine in the public journals; and as a result, many a rural pastor grows rest. less, and wants to fly, like the meths, into the bright candle. This is a foolish ambition. Let every country pastor who has a strong foothold among his people and who is doing the Lord's work successfully 'learn therewith to be content." If he has not the city pastor's large salary, neither does he have his constant drain upon the purse. If he has not the metropolitan notoriety, neither does he feel the responsibilities and ver ations which the notoriety brings with it. If he has not some of the luxuries of city life, he has not its wear and its worries.

A minister has to encounter certain difficul ties wherever his tent is pitched. Witty Dr John Todd used to say that, "in the country they sleep religion to death and in the cities they kill it with silks and ice creams." But let the rural pastor only keep his people wide awake (as the Bellamys and Chapins and Porters were wont to do hereabouts), and he will find that healthy bodies and undisturbed minds and homes free from city temptations will furnish him a glorious field. Country folk have time to think. They can digest good sermons. Their brains are clarified by pure air and out-door work. Play-houses, gaming rooms, and midnight routs do not demoralize his simpler and more sedate parishioners. He lives in the eye of Nature, feasts his soul on green fields and the ever lasting hills, and feels that God is nearer than in the roaring, wicked town. Above all, it is given to him to train up the boys who will yet become the working force in the affairs of church and state. Country boys have always come to rule the nution. What a mighty responsibility rests on country pulpits and pastors!

(From the Examiner and Chronicle.) In a recent article we spoke of the importance to the people of pure water. Not less Posters, important a thing is pure air. To have pure air two things are necessary, good drainage and good ventilation. And yet how few people, in selecting a location for their residence, take these two things into considera-Hop. A house which is defective in either of these two things is a family death-trap. Bad drainage in the country is the fruitful cause of malaria, typhoid fever and many other diseases; while it induces a low state of the system which makes it an easy frey to any epidemic disorder. In the large cities bad drainage fills the houses with sewer-gas, which produces a variety of maarial disorders, and introduces the germs of typhoid fever, diphtheria and kindred scourges. Ill-ventilated rooms intensify the evils arising from bad drainage; and even in a perfectly well built house, and in a healthy location, they drain the system of its power, and are the cause of half the cases

The importance of pure air was well illusrated at Princeton College last year. The own is a beautiful one, supposed to be very healthy, and the College building roomy and well-appointed. Suddenly the students began to fall sick of a typho-malarial fever for which no apparent cause existed. President McCosh described it as "a dis pensation of God, sent to chasten and hum ble us;" but a little search showed that it was only a dispensation of sewer-gas. The students were sent home, and extensive changes have been made in the sewerage, at emsiderable expense. Members of the New York Board of Health and of the New lersey State Board of Health declare the building to be now in perfect sanitary condiion. All the trouble and the loss of several lives might have been prevented, if the rustees of the College had only been sufficiently impressed with the fact that pure air is as much a necessity of a college course as pure mathematics.

It can hardly be too strongly insisted that he only preventive of disease is pure air to reathe, and pure water to drink. Given ese two, and with reasonable care of himself, any man is almost sure to live out his hree core and ten years, unless suddenly 895 Moritz, Thos. - House and lot, Glenkilled by one of those accidents that no foresight can prevent.
